

Scoring Information:

Student progress and understanding could be evaluated by teacher observation and monitoring as students are working. Individual conversations could also provide feedback and reinforcement of the goals of the lesson.

The final product or painting could also be used to determine if the goals and objectives of the lessons were demonstrated effectively.

Other related items:

A writing exercise or activity could be incorporated as a follow-up activity.

For example, students could write a story about his or her monkey and describe the experiences it might encounter while in the jungle.

Students could also reflect about their work through journal writing
